Executive Summary & State of the Region

The New York City region has been awarded $658.1 million over 11 funding rounds. Despite the challenges of the COVID-19 pandemic, these projects are expected to create and retain over 55,000 jobs and leverage over $6.2 billion in private and other public investment.

MESSAGE FROM THE CO-CHAIRS

July 2022

Governor Hochul, Lieutenant Governor Delgado and Commissioner Knight:

On behalf of the New York City Regional Economic Development Council, we are pleased to submit our 2022 Annual Report.

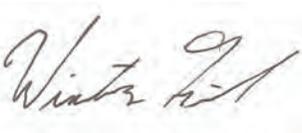

Over the past decade, the New York City Regional Council has been instrumental in promoting inclusive economic growth across the five boroughs of New York City. The 2022 Annual Report provides a valuable reminder of the impact our projects are having and the vital contributions they are making to communities impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic. This update, which tracks investments that the state has made in the city over the past 11 years, is the foundation for our planning for the restoration of jobs lost in the pandemic and preparation for the demands of the digital economy of the future.

The 2022 Annual Report assesses new challenges facing New York City because of the pandemic and spotlights the evolution of our regional and statewide priorities, along with the steps we have taken toward meeting our goals. We highlight strategies we are implementing to ensure that the Regional Council advances an agenda for equitable growth in low and moderate-income communities.

New York City's business districts have not recovered from the 2020 lockdown, travel restrictions and increase in remote work that have limited tourism and commercial activity for more than two years. To compensate for losses suffered during this period, the Regional Council is prioritizing investments in high-growth sectors of the economy and in preparing the workforce for jobs in the post-pandemic era. As in years past, the New York City Regional Council has put forward a robust framework to incentivize job creation and economic activity, and to create opportunities for personal advancement by more New Yorkers.

We thank Governor Hochul for her many years of strong leadership and guidance of the Regional Councils and look forward to collaborating with Lieutenant Governor Delgado and Commissioner Knight, a former member of the New York City Regional Council, as the Council provides local input into the state's economic and workforce development activities.

Sincerely,

STATE OF THE REGION

More than two years since the first confirmed case of COVID-19, New York City has made significant strides in recovering from the worst of the pandemic. The unemployment rate has declined from 21% as of May 2020 to 6.2% in May 2022. The city's economic output (gross city product) suffered only a 5.5% loss during 2020 and increased at least 3.1% in 2021. Venture capital raised by New York City startups surged to a historic $48.2 billion in 2021, more than doubling the previous record of $23.2 billion in 2019.

The social and economic impact of the pandemic was concentrated in limited sectors of the economy, including tourism-dependent industries like retail, arts and entertainment, and food services and hospitality. These sectors represented only 9% of economic activity but 20% of jobs pre-pandemic and today have recovered the lowest share of pandemic job losses. More than 200,000 of the 947,000 private sector jobs lost during the early months of the pandemic have yet to be recovered and over 245,000 New Yorkers remain unemployed. Only 38% of Manhattan office workers were at the workplace on the average weekday as of late April 2022, delaying the recovery of small businesses that populate the borough's commercial corridors.

The pandemic killed over 40,000 city residents and infected at least 30% of the population. Black and Hispanic New Yorkers died or were hospitalized due to COVID-19 at significantly higher rates than white residents, according to data from the New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene.

Grand Central Station

New York City's recovery is gaining momentum heading into summer 2022, demonstrated by strong tax revenues, increased transit ridership and employment numbers for April 2022 that show the largest monthly private sector jobs gain since last April:

- Tax collections for city fiscal year (FY) starting July 1, 2021, were $55.7 billion through March 2022, $1.5 billion higher than the city's February 2022 estimate.
- As of late April 2022, total consumer spending in New York City increased 8.2% compared to January 2020. Small business revenue in the city increased nearly 6% in January 2022 compared to January 2020; the number of operating small businesses was up 12%.
- Ridership on the subway, Metro-North and Long Island Rail Road reached new pandemic-era highs in mid-May 2022; weekday subway ridership was down 41% and bus ridership down 38% compared to pre-pandemic norms.
- Over 36,000 private sector jobs were added in April 2022, due primarily to strong hiring by health care and administrative services employers and a rebound in accommodation and food services hiring.

At the same time, notable economic headwinds threaten the vitality of the city:

- More job openings exist in New York City today than before the pandemic, yet the city's unemployment rate remains stubbornly high at 6.2%—compared to a historic low of 3.7% pre-pandemic—reflecting a significant skills gap for the jobs in today's economy.
- As of April 2022, arts, entertainment and recreation, and food service and accommodation employment remains 18% below pre-pandemic levels, the steepest decrease among the city's economic sectors. These sectors are unlikely to fully recover until tourism returns to 2019 levels, which is projected to occur in 2024 as business and international travel lag domestic tourism. About 20,000 of the city's hotel rooms remain closed as of May 2022, some permanently.
- Rising inflation has increased residents' cost of living: New York metro area prices grew 6.1% over the 12 months ending March 2022, the highest level since February 1991.

- Stock market volatility jumped in March 2022 to its highest level in over a year and more than twice the pre-pandemic average. Prolonged market volatility or a market downturn would dampen growth and drag on the city’s securities industry, which accounts for one-fifth of private sector wages and 7% of city tax collections in FY 2021.
- The city’s tax base may be at risk if pandemic-related relocations are permanent, or outmigration persists. New York City’s population declined by over 336,000 residents, or 3.8%, between April 1, 2020, and July 1, 2021—the sharpest decline of any U.S. city except San Francisco (-6.7%).
- Elevated crime threatens to discourage the return of tourists and office workers. In 2022 through the first week of June, the number of major felony offenses was up 38% from the same period in 2021 and up 36% from 2019.

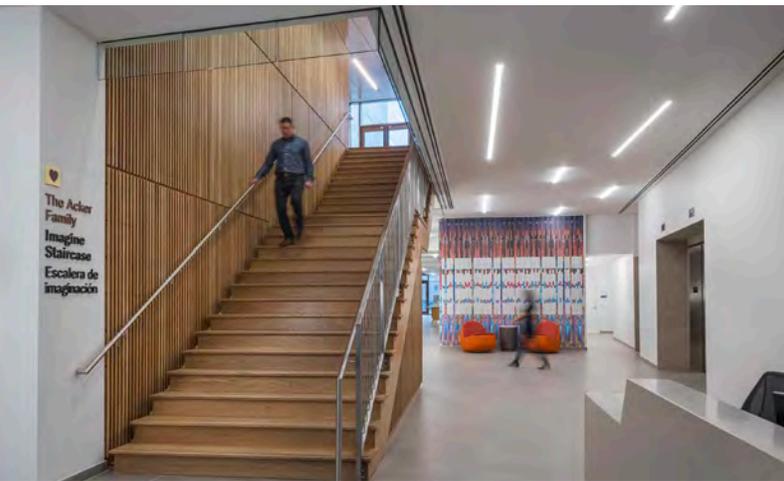

Since its inception, the New York City Regional Economic Development Council (REDC) has released an annual progress report detailing the region’s steady economic growth. In 2022, the REDC’s annual progress report assesses the city’s economy post-pandemic and updates strategies and priorities with a particular focus on workforce development.

Through the statewide REDC and Consolidated Funding Application (CFA) process, the New York City region has been awarded $658.1 million in the first 11 funding rounds. Despite the impact from the pandemic, funded projects will create and retain over 55,000 jobs and result in over $6.2 billion in private and other public investment. In 2022, the REDC continued to conduct outreach to organizations, community leaders and elected officials across the five boroughs to explain the work of the REDC and the CFA funding process and encourage a greater diversity of applications for state funding.

Here are a few examples of what was accomplished in the past year:

Queens Community House celebrated the ground-breaking of its multimillion-dollar Forest Hills Community Center project on July 29, 2021. The modernization of the 19,000-square-foot community center, which is being supported by a $1.4 million grant awarded in REDC Round IX, will allow Queens Community House to reclaim more than 2,000 square feet of currently unusable space for its programming, including its Queens Childcare Network, while featuring a range of workforce development, social service and neighborhood-strengthening services.

Covenant House New York

On November 10, 2021, Governor Hochul announced Chinatown as the $20 million winner of the fifth round of the Downtown Revitalization Initiative (DRI). The Chinatown DRI planning process is well under way, and projects are expected to be recommended by the community to the state for funding by the end of July 2022.

Janus Property Company hosted a ribbon-cutting ceremony on March 1, 2022, for the Taystee Lab Building, a $700 million, 11-story, 350,000-square-foot mixed-use development located in West Harlem's Manhattanville Factory District. Governor Hochul and Commissioner Knight attended. The former Taystee Bakery site has been repurposed and reimagined as a new, Class-A, LEED-certified life sciences building. The project was awarded a $10 million Empire State Development (ESD) grant in REDC Round I.

On March 10, 2022, Evergreen Incorporated: Your North Brooklyn Business Exchange celebrated the opening of the Wesley H. Watson Industrial Center at 500 Stagg Street, a new $6.8 million manufacturing facility in East Williamsburg. The project was awarded a $728,000 ESD capital grant in REDC Round VI.

SUNY Maritime College held a groundbreaking in early April 2022 for the William Austen Marine Education

& Seamanship Center. The Seamanship Center will boast a marine environmental science wet lab and will support seamanship training for students and professional mariners. The project was awarded a $600,000 ESD capital grant in REDC Round VIII.

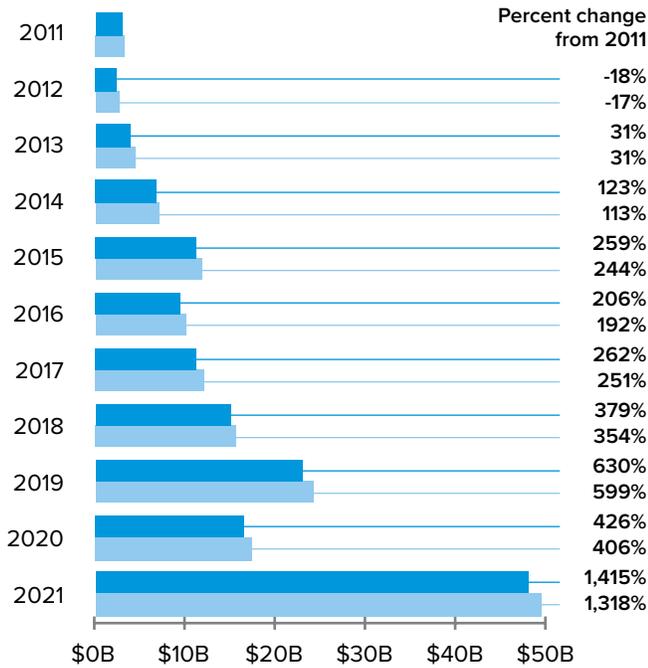

On May 17, 2022, Governor Hochul announced the start of construction on a $118 million mixed-use affordable housing development in the Brooklyn neighborhood of Brownsville. Known as Bridge Rockaway, the development will offer 174 affordable apartments and 39,000 square feet of ground floor manufacturing space owned and operated by Greenpoint Manufacturing and Design Center, which will be available for lease to light manufacturers. The project was awarded a $1.6 million ESD grant in REDC Round IX.

Governor Hochul also announced the opening of Covenant House New York's new $76 million, 80,000-square-foot facility on May 23, 2022, which will provide housing and supportive services to youth who are experiencing homelessness and survivors of human trafficking. The supportive programs include health and wellness services, workforce training, social case management, recreational activities and advocacy and legal services. The facility will serve approximately 1,900 youth annually. The project was awarded a $2.0 million ESD grant in REDC Round VIII.

On July 14, Governor Hochul attended a ribbon cutting ceremony for Greater Nexus, a brand-new $11.5 million co-working space funded through the $10 million Downtown Jamaica Downtown Revitalization Initiative award and operated by Greater Jamaica Development Corporation in partnership with York College. Greater Nexus is a state-of-the-art facility featuring 10,000 square feet of affordable and flexible workspace that can accommodate 75-100 individuals. Amenities include a collaborative open workspace, conference rooms, soundproof phone booths and a podcast room for content creators. The new space provides access to business equipment and services to help foster innovation and business growth in Downtown Jamaica. The project was supported by a $1.65 million ESD capital grant and a $685,230 Homes and Community Renewal grant.

Regional Workforce Inventory

New York City has yet to recover more than 200,000 private sector jobs lost since the onset of the pandemic and 6.2% of the city's labor force remains unemployed—more than twice the rate in the rest of the state (3.1%). The REDC is committed to ensuring that populations with the highest unemployment rates have access to quality employment opportunities and workforce training programs, as well as support services such as child care.

PRIORITY REGIONAL TRADABLE SECTORS & IN-DEMAND SKILL SETS

Technology

Technology (tech) is one of the fastest growing sectors of New York City's economy and will be a reliable source of future employment growth. Employment in tech occupations across all city industries grew 46% in the decade preceding the pandemic—from 114,000 in 2009 to 167,000 in 2019—compared to 26% total private sector jobs growth over the same period. The city's tech firms added 81,000 jobs from 2009 to 2019, posting 80% employment growth. Local tech companies slowed hiring during the first two years of the pandemic but bucked the citywide trend of employment losses, adding an additional 14,000 jobs in 2020 and 2021.

COVID-19 bolstered the long-term hiring outlook for many tech occupations, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), due partly to increased demand for telework infrastructure and IT security. Major tech employers like Amazon, Apple, Facebook, Google and TikTok have all expanded in New York City over the past two years and over 70% of New York City-based executives said they plan to add more tech hires in 2022 compared to 2021 in a recent Tech:NYC/Accenture survey.

Candidates with tech skills are employable in high-paying jobs across multiple city industries. In 2021, over 57,000 tech workers were employed in the city's professional services sector, 35,000 worked in information and nearly 23,000 worked in financial services. As of Q1 2022, the median salary advertised for a tech job opening in New York City was $112,000.

In-Demand Skills & Occupations

Equipping New York City's diverse local talent pool with the skills needed for tech jobs will support equitable employment growth and solidify the city as a premiere global tech ecosystem. While most New Yorkers employed in tech hold at least a bachelor's degree, a growing number of jobs are accessible to workers with less than a four-year degree. For example, New York City employers posted openings for more than 10,600 tech positions between April and November 2020 for occupations in which at least 9% of the workforce holds less than a bachelor's degree.

Top skills sought by New York City employers for tech occupations that require less than a bachelor's degree and three years of experience or less include technical support, network administration, help desk support, device management, workflow support and customer support.

The certification most in-demand in job postings for tech roles is CompTIA Network+, a certification for technical support and IT operational roles. Kingsborough Community College offers a free online CompTIA Computer Technician Program to help New Yorkers with a high school degree pass the CompTIA certification exam and prepare for an entry level IT position, such as help desk technician, network technician and desktop support administrator.

Examples of tech occupations available to non-degree holding entry-level candidates include computer user and network support specialists. These occupations encompass job titles such as help desk technicians and IT network specialists, have median annual salaries of over $64,000 and are available to candidates with less than a bachelor's degree that have no or minimal prior experience. Both sectors projected double-digit growth from 2018 to 2028, the latest decade for which city-level employment projections are available from the BLS. And COVID-19's effect on remote work and internet use means job growth should outpace projections. In addition to computer and IT occupations, sales roles within tech firms are in high demand among employers, often command high salaries and may offer candidates an entry point to a tech career and employer-sponsored training programs.

Workforce Development Programs

According to research by the Center for an Urban Future, there are at least 238 tech education and training organizations operating 506 programs across the five boroughs in addition to several city-led initiatives in public schools. For example, the city Department of Education is developing a new initiative which will provide high school students with exposure to work experience, career-focused coursework and access to specific training and credentials connected to the needs of employers in today's economy. Tech is one of the first career pathways the program will focus on in the 2022-2023 school year.

REDC-funded organizations with a strong track record of preparing diverse New Yorkers for careers in tech include Per Scholas and Pursuit.

Life Sciences

New York City's life sciences industry—already gaining momentum prior to the COVID-19 pandemic—expanded to recorded highs in employment, public investment and private venture capital in recent years. The city's life sciences startups attracted a record $1.9 billion in venture capital in 2021, more than double the $955 million invested in 2019, while local research and education institutions secured $2.9 billion in National Institutes of Health funding in federal FY 2021. Public and private funding has helped attract companies to the region: over 500 life sciences businesses formed in New York City from 2010 to 2021. As a result, life sciences employment increased 17% from 2015 to 2019, adding over 2,500 jobs and significantly outpacing citywide private sector jobs growth (9%). Like tech, life sciences is one of the few city industries in which employment increased during the first two years of the pandemic, adding over 1,600 jobs in 2020 and 2021 combined.

Life sciences will continue to be a source of quality job throughout the five boroughs: the city estimates the industry could generate over 2,000 new companies and 40,000 jobs over the next 10 to 15 years. While Manhattan accounts for the majority (63%) of the city's life sciences jobs, a growing number of life sciences facilities have established a presence in the other boroughs. Examples include BioBAT at Brooklyn Army Terminal, biomanufacturing facilities in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, laboratory spaces in Long Island City and an incubator at SUNY Downstate in Central Brooklyn. Boroughs outside Manhattan added nearly 900 life sciences jobs in 2021, a 13% increase compared to 2020.

While the life sciences sector currently accounts for a relatively small share of citywide employment, the sector's growth prospects, emerging clusters and demand for non-four-year degree candidates makes it a promising target for workforce development efforts.

In-Demand Skills & Occupations

The number of job postings by New York City life sciences companies has increased steadily over the past decade and peaked at a high of over 2,000 unique postings in May 2022. While most job postings list requirements of a bachelor's degree or higher, several in-demand roles could be filled by candidates without a four-year degree. An estimated 40% of the city's life sciences jobs are in occupations with a typical entry-level education requirement of less than a four-year degree. For example, the most in-demand occupation among New York City life sciences employers during the 12 months ending May 2022 was sales representatives—an occupation that typically requires only a high school education and no prior experience.

Top skills sought by New York City employers for life sciences occupations that require less than a bachelor's degree include data entry, specimen collection, phlebotomy, sales and billing.

Workforce Development Programs

New York City lacks a cohesive workforce development strategy for life sciences career pathways. The city-led LifeSci NYC Internship Program places undergraduate and graduate students in paid internships with life sciences companies and has resulted in more than 400 student placements in the first four years, a majority of whom have been women or people of color. Programs for pre- or non-college bound students are few and smaller in scope. Programs like HYPOTHEkids' HK Maker Lab and Genspace's Biorocket Research Internship programs are focused on exposing New York City high school students from underrepresented backgrounds to careers in the life sciences but these programs are competitive and combined only serve about 40 students.

Several programs in development could help increase New Yorkers' exposure to life sciences careers. As part of the LifeSci NYC initiative, the New York City Economic Development Corporation (NYCEDC) is currently soliciting proposals for additional talent and workforce development programs to help build a skilled and diverse local life sciences talent pool.

Offshore Wind

In July 2019, New York state passed the Climate Leadership and Community Protection Act—an ambitious plan that requires the state to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 85% by 2050. In alignment with the state’s energy goals, New York City committed to achieving 100% clean electricity by 2040 and carbon neutrality by 2050. Achieving city and state climate goals necessitates significant investments, new sources of energy generation and a workforce prepared to meet the demands of a greener economy. The city’s growing green economy already employs New Yorkers in roles from solar panel installers to energy-efficient building designers and sustainable construction.

New York City’s burgeoning offshore wind (OSW) industry is pivotal to the city’s clean energy transition and is poised to support rapid employment growth. New York City—already home to 47% of the state’s OSW-related jobs—announced in September 2021 a commitment of $191 million in OSW investments over 15 years, generating up to 13,000 jobs in the five boroughs. One scenario outlined by the Worker Institute at Cornell projects that installing 3 gigawatts of offshore wind in the city by 2030 has the potential to create over 5,300 direct jobs annually.

NYCEDC has already invested $57 million in the South Brooklyn Marine Terminal in Sunset Park to convert it into an offshore wind port. The city is considering additional locations for offshore wind facilities, including two proposed sites on Staten Island.

In-Demand Skills & Occupations

Ensuring the city’s workforce has the skills demanded by the growing OSW industry will create local jobs, support the city’s clean energy goals and position the city as a strategic player in the growing East Coast OSW ecosystem. An analysis by NYSERDA found that nearly half of OSW employment statewide in 2030 will be concentrated in production and manufacturing (20%) or installation and repair (29%). Construction and manufacturing will account for nearly 60% of offshore wind employment growth through 2040.

Several occupations have severe workforce gaps statewide, including hoist and winch operators and wind turbine service technicians. Further, the top 10 OSW occupations with severe to moderate projected workforce gaps have typical minimum educational requirements of either a high school diploma or an apprenticeship/postsecondary training, suggesting the wind energy sector is a potential landing spot for the 65% of unemployed New Yorkers with less than a four-year degree.

Overarching skills required for non-degree jobs in the OSW industry include skills related to sea safety (e.g., swimming, first aid, sea survival), manufacturing and maintenance (e.g., welding, machining) in addition to general skills like communication and critical thinking.

Workforce Development Programs

Several offshore wind-specific workforce development training programs are currently active or in development in New York City:

- Kingsborough Community College (KCC): KCC’s Maritime Technology program is in the process of becoming a certified OSW basic safety training facility with the support of $1.5 million in city capital funding. KCC is expanding its programming to offer industry-standard safety training needed for most roles in offshore wind.
- LaGuardia Community College (LAGCC): LAGCC is partnering with Siemens Gamesa to build an inclusive offshore wind workforce that ensures a robust local talent pipeline.
- South Brooklyn Marine Terminal: Equinor will establish a learning center in Brooklyn to connect city residents to training for employment in the OSW industry.
- SUNY Maritime College: Offers a Center of Excellence for Offshore Energy and has established relationships with major OSW developers and labor unions.

NYCEDC recently announced an offshore wind program design sprint with local stakeholders to educate local workforce and business development entities about the type of talent and supply chain needs of the OSW industry. The outcomes of the design sprint will enable stakeholders to develop program proposals for OSW developers to consider as part of their applications to NYSERDA's Offshore Wind Renewable Energy credit solicitation.

There are additional OSW workforce development programs outside the five boroughs but within the metro area. SUNY Farmingdale State College offers wind programs for people of different experience levels, including technical training, microcredentials and certificates. And SUNY Stony Brook University is developing the Offshore Wind Training Institute and offers a course in offshore wind.

Additional Local Activity in Offshore Wind

Several OSW and energy companies are developing a footprint in the New York City region and engaging local communities. Equinor and bp are partnering to develop the Empire 1 and 2 OSW projects both in proximity to New York City, and both the South Brooklyn Marine Terminal port and the Astoria sub-station. Equinor has already begun community outreach efforts in Brooklyn and Queens to raise awareness about these projects with community groups and potential job seekers. Ørsted and Eversource are developing several wind farm lease areas off the coast of Long Island including South Fork Wind and Sunrise Wind. They have begun community outreach and some hiring for wind technician roles with a year of training in Europe. Offshore wind firms are likely to form labor agreements with many of the city's unions, which are expected to play a key role in turbine assembly, installation, operation and maintenance.

The Offshore Wind Innovation Hub is a Sunset Park-based offshore wind startup incubator launched in June 2022 through a partnership between Equinor, the Urban Future Lab at the NYU Tandon School of Engineering and the National Offshore Wind R&D Consortium, with support from NYCEDC.

New York City has several pre-apprenticeship programs with direct entry status, allowing them to train and refer candidates from under-represented communities to unions outside of their normal recruitment cycles. These programs have contributed to diversity goals within the city's building trades unions and are well-positioned to be part of an offshore wind training and workforce pipeline diversity strategy. Notable programs include Nontraditional Employment for Women; Rebuilding Together New York City; Pathways to Apprenticeship; Edward J. Malloy Initiative for Construction Skills; YouthBuild; and Helmets to Hardhats.

TARGET POPULATIONS FOR WORKFORCE TRAINING

Within months of New York City's unemployment rate falling to a record low in spring 2020, the pandemic shocked the labor market, causing a drastic increase in unemployment and reduction in labor force participation among economically vulnerable populations. Gaps in educational attainment, racial and gender inequity, rising child care costs and jobs with limited opportunities for advancement left New Yorkers ill-prepared for the economic fallout of the pandemic. While many public and private organizations sponsored new programs to alleviate these challenges, reducing disparities in employment rates and building a more inclusive economy across the region requires that additional attention is paid to populations that were particularly impacted by the pandemic. In New York City, these populations include but are not limited to Black New Yorkers, women, workers aged 16-24, non-college educated workers, those who have completed some college but have not completed a degree and those living in neighborhoods that were disproportionately impacted by COVID-19.

Black New Yorkers participate in the labor force at a lower rate than their peers of the same age and gender. In 2021, 57% of Black men participated in the city's labor force, compared to 66% of men overall. Black workers with a college degree have lower unemployment rates than those without, but only 26% of working age Black New Yorkers have a college degree. Further, unlike other racial and ethnic groups, the gap in unemployment rates between college educated and non-college educated workers shrank in 2020, due to a larger increase in unemployment among college educated Black residents. This is likely due to Black New Yorkers with college degrees having higher rates of employment in education and government, both of which were impacted by COVID-19.

According to national research conducted by OneTen, an organization committed to hiring and advancing one million Black workers by 2030, only 40% of

Brooklyn Public Library Business & Career Center

Black workers who do not have a college degree and earn less than $50,000 are employed full-time. And because the majority are out of work, unemployed or employed part-time, 64% report being interested in enrolling in more schooling or obtaining a technical certification.

Women are also among the highest need groups for new workforce training. While women are unemployed at lower rates than men, they are also underrepresented in the labor force. From 2019 to 2021, on average there was a 10 percentage point difference in labor force participation among men and women without children and a 26 percentage point difference between men and women with children. This gap underscores the need for child care support in workforce training programs that work to increase the number of women in the labor force. With schools closed and child care costs rising, women had to leave the labor force to take care of their children in greater numbers than men.

Non-college educated women face the same risks as Black workers. Women saw drastic declines in labor force participation compared to men with the same education during the pandemic; the number of women in the labor force without a high school degree and with only a high school degree decreasing by 12.8% and 6% respectively. Because women without a college degree tend to be overrepresented in the hospitality, health care and personal services sectors, they were more susceptible to career disruptions during the pandemic and need workforce training programs that can introduce them to jobs and industries with more flexibility.

Graduates of the City University of New York

Young New Yorkers aged 16 to 24 saw the most drastic increase in unemployment rates from 2019 to 2021. Unemployment among young New Yorkers rose to 20.4% in 2020 and increased to 20.9% in 2021. While this is likely due to the slow growth in the retail and leisure and hospitality sectors—which disproportionately employ younger New Yorkers—it also underscores the need for a diverse set of workforce training opportunities that connect young people to internships and jobs with opportunities for advancement.

There are nearly 700,000 city residents who have completed some college coursework but have not completed either a two-year or four-year degree (referred to as "stop-outs"), many of whom were previously students at the City University of New York (CUNY). The cost of tuition and family and work responsibilities—among other stressors—all play a role in the decision to not continue an educational program. These challenges, while always present, were exacerbated by COVID-19. In the wake of the pandemic, with enrollment declines facing colleges across the nation, CUNY announced the CUNY Comeback Program aimed at any student who was enrolled at a CUNY college during the pandemic and has an outstanding balance owed to CUNY, including graduates and those who dropped out before degree completion. So far, over $100 million in debt has been erased for 57,000 students through the country's largest debt-forgiveness initiative of its kind. Additional programs are needed to re-engage individuals in their educational goals, thereby increasing their opportunities in today's economy.

EMPLOYER ENGAGEMENT

Regardless of sector, developing a strong talent pipeline aligned to industry needs requires the active engagement and collaboration of industry partners. Whether providing insights for better aligning curriculum or creating a proactive connection to employment through internship and apprenticeship programs, employers play an important role in ensuring that workforce programs can effectively place New Yorkers in jobs.

In the tech sector, a slate of publicly funded workforce programs has demonstrated that employers are more than seven times more likely to return to hire from a program a second time if they have played a role in informing curricula and program delivery. Outcome data from recent CUNY computer science programs suggest that students in tech-focused programs of study are more than three times more likely to have a job offer at their time of graduation if they have participated in an on-the-job learning opportunity (e.g., internship) with employers in their desired career field.

Despite the benefits and necessity of industry collaboration in the development of workforce programs, dedicated resources needed to thoroughly understand sectors and support proactive talent pipeline development are often limited.

WRAPAROUND SERVICES

Wraparound services are critical to the long-term success and achievement of individuals who require both formal and informal support and are often overlooked as barriers to participation and success in today's workforce. Determining the wraparound services New Yorkers need most will be a critical component of the development of a successful workforce development strategy through the REDC process.

The New York State Department of Labor (NYSDOL) Workforce Development surveys emphasize the need for robust wraparound services. Job seekers statewide identified misaligned credentials, insufficient education or training, access to reliable transportation and child or elder care as barriers to employment. The survey of employers shows that the most desired support services in New York City include child care assistance (40% of respondents noted a need), education/tuition assistance or reimbursement (36%) and transportation assistance (27%).

Several additional legislative and policy solutions should be considered in addition to the specific needs outlined below. For example, incentivize labor force participation by allowing recipients of public benefit assistance recipients to participate in publicly funded workforce trainings, postsecondary education and other employment programs without any impact on benefits for six months—regardless of additional income earned. Other measures that would benefit job seekers include expansion of apprenticeship models that enable participants to earn and learn at the same time; ensuring that funding directed towards the Office of Workforce and Economic Development is flexible for providers to meet the needs of New Yorkers and employers; and investing in a 21st century integrated data system for education, job training and employment programs to accurately track and share outcomes.

Child care

Access to affordable and quality child care affects low-income parents' and guardians' ability to participate in and complete education and workforce training. This barrier already existed but has been exacerbated by the COVID-19 pandemic. As noted above, 40% of NYSDOL survey employer respondents in New York City named child care assistance as their most desired support service. Similarly, nearly 15% of New York City job seekers named access to reliable child (or elder) care as a mild or severe barrier to employment and nearly 25% named child care a mild or severe barrier to completing educational programs. In 2019, the New York City REDC Child Care working group identified affordable and accessible care as an additional burden for low-income families—particularly women—seeking training opportunities in New York City. There was a lack of existing programs and those that existed were unlikely to meet geographic needs or be available at the times of day needed for parents and guardians seeking to enroll in training programs.

Cost and availability continue to be major roadblocks to accessing child care in the United States in general and in New York state more specifically. The average cost of full-time child care in centers for all children ages 0-4 in the U.S. is $9,589 a year, higher than the average cost of in-state college tuition ($9,410). The Citizens' Committee for Children estimated the average annual rate for home-based child care for children ages 0-4 is $10,296 and $18,746 for center-based care in New York City. The latter consumes roughly 30% of median household income for all families with young children. The child care cost burden is higher for single parents and guardians, with care consuming 54% of median income for center-based care and 30% of median income for home-based care. Using a federally recommended affordability threshold of 7% of household income spent on child care, center-based care is unaffordable for 93% of families with young children, and home-based care is unaffordable for 80%.

New York City Mayor Eric Adams recently announced a $2 billion investment in child care over the next four years through the plan, "Accessible, Equitable, High-quality, Affordable: A Blueprint for Child Care & Early Childhood Education in New York City," released on June 28, 2022. The Blueprint outlines steps the city will take to provide high-quality, equitable and accessible child care. It also establishes the first Office of Child Care and Early Childhood Education in FY 2023. Improving the child care system in the city is aimed at reducing poverty, improving family economic stability, ensuring healthy childhood development and increasing the ability of parents and guardians—especially women—to work and earn more. This effort builds on the Child Care Quality and Innovation Initiative, a partnership with the Robin Hood Foundation that established a $100 million fund to improve child care quality and access over the next four years. This funding can be used to develop solutions, including expanding access in areas that lack providers and providing options beyond traditional working hours to accommodate parents and guardians with atypical schedules. The Adams administration specifically acknowledged the need for child care as a wraparound service for New Yorkers to be able to successfully attain relevant skills to compete in the job market.

It is imperative to provide adequate child care resources to meet the needs of parents and guardians seeking to participate in education and workforce training to improve their skills and economic mobility. There has been a recent rise in interest in addressing this issue—largely exacerbated by the pandemic—and states, municipalities and organizations across the country are taking steps to solve for these barriers.

Common child care challenges are as follows:

- Complex needs and schedules: The need to match parents and guardians seeking education and training schedules with timing in the availability of child care. This can be more difficult for the many parents and guardians who are also working while enrolled in workforce programs/activities.
- Inadequate information about available care options. Parents and guardians seeking education and training may not know what child care options are available to meet their specific needs.
- Unaffordable care and inadequate public funding. Public funding for early childhood programs and child care assistance is insufficient to serve all who are eligible. Eligibility criteria or application requirements may make it difficult for parents and guardians to access care even when funds are available.
- Inadequate supply of quality care. Supply of high-quality child care is inadequate. Quality child care available during the nontraditional or unpredictable hours that parents and guardians are in workforce development or education programs can be especially hard to find.

Education

While educational attainment remains a top barrier to employment for New Yorkers, the barriers to education add additional pressure to job seekers who wish to pursue secondary and postsecondary pathways: 55% of NYSDOL's New York City job seeker survey respondents cited cost as a mild or severe barrier to education. Nontraditional students, or those who are over the age of 25 and are mostly part-time students who have a full-time job while attending school, typically require wraparound services to be successful students and trainees.

Financial Aid

Financial aid tends to favor traditional students and is not designed for adult and working students, who are often excluded from state and federal financial aid programs. Even those who are eligible for these funds may exhaust their aid and struggle to pay rent and other daily expenses. Many CUNY programs that provide industry-recognized credentials are underutilized by potential students due to high out-of-pocket costs and lack of financial aid for the program's target populations. In the most recent state budget, Governor Hochul prioritized the expansion of the state's Tuition Assistance Program to support part-time students in degree-seeking programs and non-degree workforce credential programs at community colleges. Federal Pell grant funding is still only available to full-time students, although there is pending federal legislation that would expand eligibility to cover participants in short-term education and training programs.

CUNY Accelerated Study in Associate Programs

CUNY's Accelerated Study in Associate Programs (ASAP) aims to help associate degree-seekers complete their degree as quickly as possible by addressing systemic barriers and personal responsibilities that bar students from timely degree completion. ASAP provides academic, social and financial support to full-time students including individualized course schedules, academic and career advisement, scholarships and tuition assistance, as well as other financial assistance to reduce or eliminate the cost of textbooks and non-tuition expenses. A main feature of this program is a free unlimited MetroCard for every ASAP student. The ASAP three-year graduation rate is 53% vs. 24% for comparable student groups.

Other Wraparound Service Models for Students

Several CUNY community colleges offer an array of wraparound services for their students aside from the ASAP program. Kingsborough Community College (KCC) proactively assesses students to develop Individual Service Plans (ISPs) that identify academic, financial and social needs. ISPs acknowledge the struggles that their students face: transportation, technology and class supplies, financial barriers, food and housing insecurity, health care access and more. To combat this, KCC offers grant-funded resources through community-based organizations and provides MetroCards, food vouchers and academic supplies as well as financial stipends. KCC currently has the funds to support 50 students annually.

Another CUNY community college with model wraparound services for potential job seekers is Queensborough Community College (QCC). QCC provides wraparound services including career counseling, career development programming, job readiness workshops, as well as social services such as benefits screenings, legal services, financial counseling and tax preparation and filing. QCC allows learners to access these supportive services to ensure holistic success in upskilling, reskilling and training and education that leads to internships, jobs and family-sustaining career opportunities.

Transportation

Another barrier to employment for many New York City job seekers is transportation. Twenty-two percent of New York City job seeker respondents cited access to reliable transportation as a mild or severe barrier to employment, according to the NYSDOL survey.

Providing direct transportation assistance is crucial to alleviate the transportation barrier for workforce development trainees. As mentioned above, the CUNY ASAP program offers full time students free MetroCards, recognizing that non-tuition costs burden students and increase the likelihood that they drop out.

PART THREE

Participation

In 2022, the REDC convened, or will convene, several work groups and remain actively engaged in many of the governor's and REDC's initiatives and priorities.

Work Groups

WORKFORCE DEVELOPMENT

The REDC Workforce Development work group met on May 26, 2022, convening REDC members and staff as part of the Round XI assignment to create a “Regional Workforce Inventory.” Members of the work group participated in a webinar entitled “Workforce Development Within the Offshore Wind Industry” hosted by NYSERDA’s Offshore Wind division. Work group members also participated in a webinar on June 21, 2022, where the statewide results of the Workforce Development Job Seeker and Business Survey were presented.

COMMUNITY AND DOWNTOWN REVITALIZATION

The FY 2023 Enacted State Budget includes a sixth round of $100 million in DRI funding. Target communities for New York state’s ten economic development regions will be announced later this year. In addition to DRI, the New York State Department of State is providing $100 million in funding through a new program—New York Forward—which will provide capacity building workshops and a streamlined plan-to-implement process for smaller communities.

A work group focused on Community and Downtown Revitalization, which will include the five offices of the borough presidents, will convene in August 2022 to address past issues, best practices and plan outreach for Round VI of DRI and the New York Forward program.

CHILD CARE

In early 2022, New York state identified $100 million in funding to build and expand child care capacity in areas with the least supply. The Invest in New York – Child Care Deserts Grant program represents an unprecedented opportunity and investment to build capacity and strengthen the state’s economy by addressing issues that impact businesses including chronic absence, productivity reductions and turnover due to inadequate options for quality child care in the parts of the state most in need. Awardees will be announced on June 30, 2022.

The REDC Child Care work group will reconvene in September 2022 to discuss the state of child care in New York City and methods to improve it in the coming year. The work group will also discuss whether to expand its purview to include elder care given the challenge cited by NYSDOL survey respondents. In addition, the Child Care and Broadband work groups will work to coordinate their strategies where applicable.

BROADBAND AND WIRELESS ACCESSIBILITY

The COVID-19 pandemic made clear that the need for increased broadband access across New York state is more urgent than ever. In addition to the ongoing efforts of New York state’s Broadband Program Office (BPO), Governor Hochul announced $1 billion in funding for the New York State ConnectALL initiative, which will include funding for municipalities under the Local Connectivity Planning Grant Program, the 21st Century Municipal Infrastructure Grant Program and the Connectivity Innovation Grant Program. ConnectALL will fund a $30-a-month broadband affordability subsidy for low-income households and an affordable housing connectivity program.

The work group will aim to reconvene in October 2022 to develop strategies to augment the impact of ConnectALL in improving New York City’s broadband infrastructure. Attendees will also discuss progress made to date by the Broadband Program Office (BPO), non-BPO capital projects under the purview of the REDC through the CFA and DRI, and independent efforts in New York City.

SMALL BUSINESS

A Small Business work group will convene in September 2022 to generate a blueprint for public-private partnerships to reinvigorate the small business recovery that is already underway. Topics of discussion will also include new state recovery programs and the growing prevalence of remote work and its impact on small businesses in the city’s central business districts

Public Outreach and Engagement

The REDC continues to prioritize engagement and outreach in Round XII. Some examples of outreach include:

- The Offices of the Queens Borough President and the Manhattan Borough President hosted virtual CFA Info Sessions on June 13, 2022, and July 6, 2022, respectively, which included the participation of REDC members, past REDC grant awardees and ESD staff. There was a total of over 200 attendees for both the CFA info sessions.
- Collaborating with the offices of the five borough presidents to solicit applications for the DRI and New York Forward. The offices of the borough presidents will be empowered to work with local elected officials, leading employers and institutions and community groups to submit applications for this year's competition.
- Holding virtual meetings and telephone conferences with potential CFA applicants representing the diversity of the city's economy.

In addition, the following organizations met with REDC members and/or staff to ensure a strong project pipeline:

- 10xBeta
- 9/11 Tribute Museum
- 92nd Street Y, New York
- A24
- BlocPower
- Brooklyn Brewery

PART FOUR

Previously Funded CFA Projects

Through the statewide REDC and CFA process, the New York City region has been awarded $658.1 million in the first 11 funding rounds for 924 total projects.

Introduction

Through the statewide REDC and CFA process, the New York City region has been awarded $658.1 million in the first 11 funding rounds for 924 total projects. This total CFA funding awarded includes $255 million in Federal Industrial Development Bond Cap assistance, as well as $50.3 million in Excelsior Jobs Program tax credit funding that was awarded in Rounds I-III, V, and VI-IX, but reserved for future use in the New York City region.

Despite the impact from the COVID-19 pandemic, 40.9% of these projects are complete, while another 45.2% are on schedule. The region's funded projects will create and retain 55,800 jobs. With the assistance of nearly $428.2 million in CFA grant and tax credit funding, 843 active projects will result in over $6.2 billion in private and other public investment, with a leverage ratio of 14.5.

Over the first 11 rounds of the CFA, the REDC designated 98 ESD capital grant awarded projects as priority projects. The 81 active priority projects have been awarded a total of nearly $144.3 million, which will leverage a total of over $3.5 billion in private and other public investment at a ratio of 24.5. Approximately 69% of these projects are either complete or on schedule.
